between 8:00 and 8:30. Picture order forms have been sent home with your child this week. If any extras are needed, they will be available that day. If you prefer to order online go to www.mylifetouch.com and enter the school i.d. number on the school's order form. Many options to choose from. There will be an order form to print out to bring on picture day. SMILE!

Interesting advice taken from www.kyria.com: Issues with authority are common in the middle school years. This is the age when young teenagers want to know the reasons behind the rules. And even then, many teens think they're exempt. This above-it-all attitude is especially frustrating to teachers and administrators, who rely on parents to teach their children to respect authority, even when they disagree. Take a proactive approach by role-playing scenarios where a teacher asks your child to do something he doesn't want to do, like redoing an assignment. Help your child come up with respectful ways to ask clarifying questions when he doesn't understand an instruction. If your child feels like he's being treated unfairly, tell him not to react and talk back—you will discuss the problem with him and then decide what to do. Remind him that respect is one way we can show God's love to others. By taking these steps, you will equip your child with an invaluable life skill.
